

Style Icon David Bowie in Berlin

Tickets can now be booked at Berlin Tourist Info offices

Berlin, 20 May 2014 David Bowie's back in Berlin: from 20 May until 10 August 2014 the Martin-Gropius-Bau will be featuring a retrospective of this exceptional artist. Without queuing: Tickets are available now from visitBerlin at the Berlin Tourist Info offices at the Hauptbahnhof (Main Station), Neues Kranzler Eck, Brandenburg Gate, Tegel Airport and the TV Tower.

The multimedia show traces Bowie's six-decade career with approximately 300 objects, including 60 original costumes, photographs, handwritten lyrics, set designs and Bowie's own instruments. Insight into Bowie's wide-ranging work will be complemented by unreleased pieces from Bowie's private collections. David Bowie has described his time in Berlin as the "happiest time of my life". For its stop in Berlin, the exhibition has been especially expanded with features on Bowie's musical work in Berlin.

"The David Bowie exhibition is a major highlight for Berlin," says Burkhard Kieker, visitBerlin CEO. "The retrospective is all the more exciting because David Bowie and Berlin are bound by a very special relationship."

Bowie's Berlin years from 1976 to 1978 were Bowie's musically most productive period, when the albums of the so-called Berlin triptych rewrote music history. The creative phase was inspired both by the Berlin subculture of the seventies as well as well as the city's rich cultural past. While in Berlin, Bowie tried out various avant-garde personalities where life and art merged into something novel. The extent of Berlin's influence on Bowie is reflected in the famous lyrics of the song "Heroes", about two lovers who kiss at a wall. More information about the exhibition can be found at visitBerlin.com and at davidbowie-berlin.de.

The exhibition was curated by London's Victoria and Albert Museum. It was a complete sell-out there, with more than 300,000 visitors.
